Eleven: The Undergraduate Journal of Sociology, a University of California, Berkeley, based publication, is currently accepting papers for its twelfth volume. We accept submissions from students from universities around the world and from various departments in the social sciences. In the past, we have published honors theses and seminar papers by students in Sociology, Ethnic Studies, Public Policy, and History. We are currently accepting submissions on a rolling basis, however, we encourage submissions as soon as possible as we will be reviewing them on a rolling basis as well.

Publishing with an academic journal comes with many rewards. We offer students the opportunity to share their research with a larger sociological community. Publishing your scholarly work also impresses graduate schools seeking applicants with a demonstrated commitment to outstanding research. Finally, our rigorous editing process perfects papers that ultimately make for excellent graduate school writing samples.

If you completed an excellent paper or honors thesis in the last three years, we strongly encourage you to submit. Full instructions on the submission process can be found on our website under the ‘Submit’ tab.
