Critical Historical Studies is an English-language peer-reviewed open access academic journal published annually in the summer by Durham University History Society. It publishes original articles and authoritative book reviews on any historical period and region, written by undergraduates worldwide. There are no costs associated with either submission or publication.

The journal is seeking assistant editors and peer-reviewers and is also soliciting submissions. All information regarding applications can be found on our website, accessible via this link, as well as in a story highlight labelled 'The Journal' on our Instagram. Additionally, the journal's student handbook is attached, containing information about the journal, the positions available and the submission guidelines. Those interested in applying to any of our roles or submitting a piece of work can do so through the 'Get Involved' button immediately below or through our website.

Get Involved

The journal will be published around July. Although submissions are accepted all year round, authors are asked to complete their submissions by the middle of June if they wish to be included in the forthcoming issue. Applications for editorial positions will close on the 15th of April 2023.

Kind regards,

Anton Higgins
Journal Editor & Website Co-ordinator for the Durham University History Society

HISTORY SOCIETY
Est. 1926