Penn History Review

Dear Dr. Blair, My name is Courtney Carpinello, and I am an editor of the Penn History Review (PHR), the University of Pennsylvania History Department's biannual publication of undergraduate historical research. This semester, we will be publishing a submission from an undergraduate at another college in the United States. We would love to receive submissions from as wide an array of institutions as possible. Would you be willing to circulate the following call for submissions on your department's listserv? Thanks for your help! --- The Penn History Review (PHR) Editorial Board is now accepting submissions for its Spring 2018 issue! The PHR is a biannual publication of the University of Pennsylvania History Department featuring undergraduate historical research. If you are proud of a piece of historical writing and would like to see it published, submit to the PHR! This semester, we will be accepting external submissions from undergraduates attending colleges and universities throughout the United States. Authors whose pieces are selected will work with our editorial board to prepare their articles for publication near the end of the semester. The PHR will be accepting submissions on a rolling basis through Friday, April 6th. We highly recommend submitting ASAP since papers will be reviewed and accepted on a first come, first serve basis. Papers must be at least twelve pages double-spaced, 12-point font, and distinguish between primary and secondary sources in a works cited page. Papers must also be submitted as Word documents rather than PDFs. You can view previous PHRs here: http://repository.upenn.edu/phr/. Please send all submissions and any questions you may have to PHRsubmissions@gmail.com. We look forward to reading your work! Sincerely, The PHR Editorial Board University of Pennsylvania PHRsubmissions@gmail.com
