

This is Hannah Cox, Editor-in-Chief for Hemispheres: The Tufts University Journal of International Affairs. We are a student-run academic journal founded in 1977 that publishes outstanding research papers and photographs by undergraduates in the interdisciplinary field of international affairs. As of today, we are now seeking submissions for our 47th volume on the theme of Currency of Power; see below for details.

Submissions should be research pieces, approx. 5000-8000 words, written by undergraduates from a broad range of disciplines relevant to international affairs (economics, history, political science, sociology, etc.). Visit this link for the paper requirements and guidelines; please direct all submissions to hemispheres@tufts.edu and ensure compliance with the submission checklist.

Submission Deadline: January 25th, 2024

Actors in the international system negotiate, exchange, amass, and expend power in their routine decision-making. In this way, power may be described as a currency. For the next issue of Hemispheres, students should assess transactions or reserves of power within international affairs.

We welcome and encourage a broad interpretation of the theme. Potential research topics may include but are not limited to the following:

Morality and enforcement of norms, emergence or adaptation of geopolitical alliances, trust and reputation, human rights, cooperative climate policy, contested territories, cyberwarfare, neocolonialism, trade blocs and disputes, dedollarization, authoritarianism and coups, electoral politics, competition in outer space
